

Good attendance this year. We were graced with beautiful weather. Our Saturday began with the usual caravan to a special program. Mark Miner graciously invited our Younklin cousin, and actress Shirley Jones to lay the wreath and honor her Great Grandfather, Civil War Veteran John K Rush, in Vansickle Cemetery, in Fayette County, near Farmington. She evidently could not make the trip, but other Younklin-Rush descendants stood in to do the honors, among them, Randall Henry, Barbara Park, and Louise Forsberg.

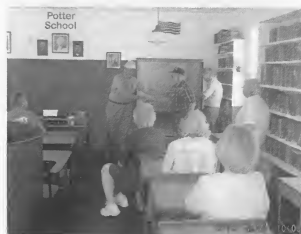

For those who could not make it, a short video of Mark's talk about this Civil War Soldier can be found on his site

<http://www.miner.com/vansicklecemetery2015.htm>

We also honored Rush's brother in law, Alexander Sanner, also a Civil War Veteran. Both were married to Younklin sisters. Following the wreath laying memorials, we were invited to tour an old one room school, Potter School, nearby by Mr. and Mrs. Delbert Hager.

Clark Brocht, and Doug and Esther Stone, at Potter

About 20 Younkins attended the morning program.

The winner of the Johann Heinrich Junghen Scholarship this year was Logan Barrick, who has attended many Younkin Reunions in the past with her mother and Grandmother, Donna Younkin

President Toni Younkin presents the scholarship to Logan Scholarship donations amounted to $313.50. Logan is attending North Carolina School of Arts. Her Aunt, Ginny Younkin won the 50/50 drawing.

Her Aunt, Ginny Younkin won the 50/50 drawing. While we're speaking of the Donna Younkin Logan family, we should say a big "Thank you" to her sister

Jean Younkin for donating a beautiful watercolor of the Lower Humber Covered Bridge for the auction. The high bidder on this painting was Lolly Peirsol, who lives near the bridge on Humber Rd. It should be a treasured piece for many years.

There were a number of new faces to welcome this year and we hope to see this as our future:

Cousins Sandee Silbaugh Kerlin & Melanie Heckler

Mark Rose came from over the river in FayetteCo.

The Lora Crabtree daughter and grandchildren helped "run" items for the auction.

2016 Saturday Morning Tour – Delilah Younkin Cemetery, Kingwood, PA

One of the annual rites of the Junghen-Younkin Reunion is the Saturday morning tour of ancient local cemeteries. This year, we will visit the "Delilah Younkin Cemetery" in Hexebarger near the village of Kingwood. Double cousin Mark Miner will lead the tour and tell stories about the lives of cousins who rest there and whose ashes have long turned to dust, but whose legacy remains on his website.

The "Delilah" cemetery was named after Delilah (Faidley) Younkin (1829-1913), who lived on a nearby farm, and where her Civil War veteran husband Frederick J. Younkin was buried in the dead of winter 1877. Yet in an ironic twist, she herself does not rest there, but rather just down the road in the Old Bethel Church of God Cemetery. There are 33 marked burials and many others hinted by field stone markers or simply sunken ground. In addition to Younkin, other names of marked graves there include Clevenger, Dumbauld, Faidley, Firestone, Gerhart, Growl, Klink, May and Nicola.

You'll hear the stories of Eli S. Younkin, who married his cousin Susan Dumbauld and died during an epileptic fit while his wife was in her ninth month of pregnancy in 1858 – and "Weasel Jake" Younkin, husband of Catherine (Faidley) Younkin, who lived at Cranberry Glade and dropped dead in front of his house in 1879. At Catherine's passing in 1893, her grave marker was inscribed:

*Oh mother, thy gentle voice is hushed.
Thy warm true heart is still.
And on thy pale and peaceful face
Is resting death's cold chill.*

Several other Younkin burials are for ill-fated children of the 1860s and 1880s. Cousin Linda Marker, who directly descends from Delilah, has conducted extensive research and suspects that Delilah's in-laws, Jacob and Salome (Weimer) Younkin Jr., are asleep here in unmarked plots dating to the late 1840s.

The Delilah cemetery also was the site of a most unusual, ironic meeting between two double cousins who had never met in the summer of 1934 – and whose collaboration on the Younkin National Home-coming Reunions of the 1930s and early '40s and Younkin family newspaper sowed the seeds for our reunions today.

If time permits, Mark hopes to make a quick stop at the Bethel Methodist Church Cemetery near Paddytown to pay respects to the grave of Albert Andrews. A Civil War veteran, Albert was the son of Elizabeth (Younkin) Andrews. While stationed at Pittston, PA, he nearly froze on nighttime guard duty and later took part in the Siege of Petersburg, VA. Even though he returned home to Kingwood after the war, Albert's health was wrecked and he died at the age of 24 in June 1871.

COUSINS

By MADOLIN EDWARDS Somerset Daily American, July 19, 2015

Ashley L. Price has probably gotten used to surprised looks on people's faces when she introduces herself. Yes, she is a funeral director. Yes, she owns the funeral home. Yes, she is only 30 years old. No, she is not related. Ashley became the owner of the former William Rowe Price Funeral Home, now Price Funeral Service Inc., in Meyersdale on Dec. 31. Bill Price was the third-generation owner and operator of the funeral home. "We talked about it a while before the decision was made," she said. "I know Bill wanted to slow down a little. He wanted to take a step back. This is his family business and he felt I was a good fit. He had trust in me and the way the community expects our business to be."

Bill Price agrees. "When she came and asked me about coming to work for me, I didn't know what to think," he said. "I knew her professionally from meetings, but I never had an employee other than helpers. I was nervous about having a full-time employee. I didn't want to make mistakes."

Bill said his three sons aren't interested in operating the business that his grandfather started in 1914. He and Ashley talked for several months about the possibility of her taking ownership. Their goals were the same, but they wanted to take it slowly. "There were three things that I wanted: a professional ethic, a work ethic — which she has great work ethic, you never know what you will be doing an hour from now — and the biggest thing, trust," he said. "That's powerful. If you don't have trust . . . We each had to trust each other." Ashley said the funeral service is slowly moving away from a family owned business and is hiring more individuals like her who are funeral directors. She said people will ask her about her dad, meaning Bill.

"We joke about being the fourth-generation funeral home owner and I'm not," she said. "People ask me how my dad is. Sometimes I correct them and sometimes I just go with it. "He's still here every day. And he's only a phone call away. Not being from the area, sometimes I don't know what or where people are talking about. So I'll call him and he'll help me out." Originally from Jenner Township, Ashley is the daughter of Dave and Luann Price. She is a 2003 North Star High School graduate. While at North Star she was involved with the school yearbook and the softball team. She went to the University of Pittsburgh at Johnstown with an undeclared major. She didn't have a plan. Nursing was a possibility. So was business. When she was in eighth grade, she took a career placement test. She then had to write a report about the results. "In the top three career options determined for me was undertaker," she said. "I had to do a report on that. Then later in high school I had another report on a career to do. I already did the one report, so I decided to do it again. I interviewed Joe Hoffman (Hoffman Funeral Homes) from Boswell and wrote my report. When it was done, I thought, 'I could do that.'" Her second year she declared biology and had enough credits to go to mortuary school. "My mom said why didn't I look at mortuary science. She said she thought I should try it," she said. "She said, 'You can go back to college if you don't like it.'" Ashley entered the Pittsburgh Institute of Mortuary Science for its yearlong course of study. She said her class at mortuary school was 60 percent women. She interned with Deaner Funeral Home before coming to work in 2011 for Bill Price. "What I like about it is that you never know what you'll be doing. Every day something is different," she said. "It's the unknown. You have to think on your toes and see how you can adjust with every situation." She is secretary of the Somerset County Funeral Directors Association and is on the board of directors for the Meyersdale Area Merchants' Association. Ashley said the other funeral directors in the county have accepted her into their ranks and she has been accepted by the Meyersdale community. "The community has supported me since day one. I love Meyersdale," Ashley said. "I walk down the street and people say hi. You don't get that in a city. It makes me feel at home, like I've been here forever."

Ashley said that although being a business owner is still pretty new to her, she likes it and has made the adjustment. "I felt it was the natural progression. And I have a good support system," she said. "I feel overwhelmed at times, but it's good. For the most part it feels like the place I should have moved into." Along with Bill, Ashley has help for each funeral from Steve Kelley, Charley McKenzie and Bill's wife, Marilyn. Ashley said a very important part of a funeral director's job is to be a good listener. "People want to share the life of the person to make you understand what that person meant to them," she said. "I don't have to say much. I'm a quiet person to start with, so it is not hard to sit back and listen." Bill said it is working out OK for them. "She'll be very successful," he said. "I'm pleased about helping do things she wants me to do. She and I act and think alike. We can almost predict what the other will say. I think Ashley has been well accepted and that will just grow."

Being young and always on call could put a damper on a person's social life. "A lot are very understanding when I get called out of a meeting," she said. "When you have real friends and family, they know. It's not like I can plan on getting called out." She and her fiancé, Jason Zimmerman, just had a baby girl, Arianna Joy, on June 15. She laughed when she said that all the classes she took and the advice she received for going through childbirth went down the tubes when her labor and delivery didn't follow the norm. She had just had lunch in the GI Dayroom with her mother and was paying the bill when her water broke. It was two weeks early. She didn't have her hospital bag packed. She said she had a viewing and Bill was on vacation in Florida. She called Charley, who was able to take care of the visitation and services while she was in labor and delivery. Arianna was born at 8:44 p.m.

"Everybody kept saying about the pain of childbirth being so bad, but I didn't think it was," Ashley said. "It was probably because I was so preoccupied trying to make sure the funeral services were being taken care of that I didn't notice as much." Jason's children Trenton and Gianna round out their family. "Being in the business you have to stay calm," Ashley said. "It helps in your personal and professional life. There's a saying that I like: 'Always behave like a duck. Keep calm and unruffled on the surface, but paddle like hell underwater.' "After all, the funeral service is for the family, it's not for us," she said. Ashley is the d/o Luann Rose Price, d/o Lela Frances Wade, d/o Mary C Younkin, d/o Levi H Younkin, s/o Jacob W "Weasel Jake," s/o Jacob, s/o Jacob, s/o Johann Heinrich Jungken.

Stuart Youngkin, 103, researcher

Stuart G. Youngkin was an Iowa farm boy whose skills in milking cows helped put him through college. While studying for bachelor's and master's degrees at Iowa State University in the late 1930s, "he was living on a farm" near campus, his daughter, Rebecca Kotrba said.

"He was milking cows in the morning and at night" for the farm family, and tending to his studies the rest of the time. "Pretty incredible," she said. It was during the Depression, and his family's crop farm didn't produce enough to pay for his education. On Saturday, April 11, Mr. Youngkin, 103, who retired in 1977 as president of the Campbell Institute for Agricultural Research in Camden, died at the Evergreens, a continuing care retirement community in Moorestown.

Mr. Youngkin grew up in the Mississippi River town of Montrose, graduated from high school there, and earned a bachelor's in horticulture in 1936 and a master's in plant pathology in 1939. Besides his off-campus milking, his daughter said, to pay his college bills for a time, "he was involved with the agriculture department and doing research in the labs." Mr. Youngkin earned a doctorate in plant pathology at Cornell University in 1943, where, to cover his education costs, he worked as a lab researcher. Mr. Youngkin began his career as a plant pathologist and geneticist with Campbell Soup Co. in Camden, working in that role from 1943 to 1952. "He went there on a kind of temporary basis," his daughter said. "He didn't have any intention to stay there. "But he got there, and it sort of clicked." He had expected a career in college agricultural research, she said, "but he flourished there." At Campbell, Mr. Youngkin was assistant to the director of research in 1952, agricultural research manager in 1953, and agricultural research director until 1961. In 1959 he went to Massachusetts Institute of Technology for senior executive training. From 1961 to 1977, he was Campbell vice president for agricultural research, and for much of that time, from 1966 to 1977, also president of the Campbell Institute. After retiring, Mr. Youngkin was president of the Philadelphia Society for Promoting Agriculture in 1987-88, its publications editor from 1985 to 1996, and its website editor from 1998 to 2001. For the National Academy of Sciences, he was a member of its agricultural board from 1962 to 1968, its subcommittee on genetic vulnerability of crops in 1973, and its ad hoc work group on U.S. and world food needs in 1976. In 1980, he was a member of the academy's board on science and technology for international development, studying "postharvest losses" in Sri Lanka. Jack Osborn, who retired from Campbell in 1985 as a senior research scientist, met Mr. Youngkin in 1940 at Cornell. "For a long time," Osborn said, "we shared an interest in surf fishing at the Jersey Shore." And, Osborn said, "we both shared an interest in woodworking." In retirement, "he became a very skilled woodworker, making beautiful furniture." Besides his daughter, Mr. Younkun is survived by sons Steven, Bruce, Donald, and Clyde, nine grandchildren, and eight great-grandchildren. His wife, Bettiebel, died in 2008. A memorial service was set for 11 a.m. Saturday, April 18, at the chapel of the Evergreens, 309 Bridgeboro Rd., Moorestown, N.J., with private interment. Donations may be sent to First Presbyterian Church, 101 Bridgeboro Rd., Moorestown, N.J. 08057
